Samantha Jeffers is an associate in the Austin office who focuses on catastrophic personal injury, medical malpractice, premises liability, and wrongful death claims. Samantha attended The George Washington University Law School, where she held numerous clerkships and gained a wide range of legal knowledge in various fields of law, which included corporate law, employment law, military law, and personal injury law.

Prior to joining Thompson Coe, Samantha practiced at a workers' compensation insurance defense firm where she gained litigation experience through representing insurance carriers across the state of Texas. Samantha also managed the firm's personal injury defense cases which allowed her to gain additional experience in various aspects of litigation, including mediations, depositions, and discovery.

Samantha has a passion for litigating and prides herself on maintaining rapport with her clients, and successfully representing their interests throughout the litigation process.
