David McFarland focuses on personal injury litigation, dram shop litigation, trucking accidents, premises liability, products liability, as well as construction defect matters. As an experienced trial lawyer, David has represented clients in several hundred death and injury claims, which has created a solid foundation of experience.

As an attorney, David McFarland has defended hundreds of business owners in cases seeking recovery under a premises liability theory. In claims asserted under the Texas Dram Shop Statute, he has represented numerous store owners, bars, and restaurants. He continues to represent clients in high-exposure disputes involving construction defect and product liability allegations, in addition to suits asserting claims for inadequate security. David litigates lawsuits involving major transportation accidents throughout the state of Texas and regularly serves as lead counsel for companies facing multimillion dollar exposure.

His health care clients have included hospitals, long term care facilities, practicing nurses and physicians, medical device manufacturers, and pharmaceutical companies. David has handled the defense of statewide, multi-claimant litigation for major pharmaceutical companies.
