Jessica Naegely has significant experience handling civil defense litigation matters to and through trial, focusing on complex product liability, premises liability, employment law, Child Victims Act claims and toxic tort matters in Massachusetts, New York, New Jersey and Maine.

Having independently managed high-value cases to and through trial, including developing and employing litigation defense strategies through taking hundreds of examinations under oath and depositions, court appearances, mediations, and trials, she currently manages the firm's Massachusetts, New Jersey and Maine practices, and handles a case load in New York.

Her instincts and attention to detail are valued beyond individual cases – she also provides counsel to clients to maximize the efficiency and performance of their litigation defense handling systems and processes on national scale, coordinating with local counsel across the nation as appropriate to implement said recommended improvements.

Background

Jessica attended Suffolk University Law School, and after her first year she served as a Judicial Intern to the First Justice of the Probate and Family Court, conducting legal research and drafting memoranda on a variety of legal issues. At Suffolk Law, she was a member of Phi Delta Phi and the Business Law Association, the latter of which she served as the President for two years. Following her second year of law school, Jessica worked at a small business law firm, and analyzed issues involving domestic and international business organizations, shareholder agreements, voting trusts, federal tax treatment of multi-national corporations, and unfair consumer protection claims under M.G.L. c. 93A. She also worked as a Legal Intern to the President and CEO of an investment firm preparing periodic compliance reports to FINRA and the SEC, and managing transfers of interest in securities.
